Tips for Understanding and Working with others

When working on communicating, we need to find ways to "connect" with others. Apart from a common language, we need to share interests and terminology to understand what the other is saying. In the same way, we must work to bridge our differences in personality. The following rule generally holds true:

The further away you are from someone on the personality grid the more difficult it is to relate to them.

For example, a highly analytical person will likely find it difficult to work with someone who is very expressive. The same conflict could occur between a driver and an amiable. This is because their ways of thinking and working are quite different.

Most of the time we will not have the luxury of choosing who we will work with. Because of this, we must work with all personality types. To do this effectively, you will need to:

- Observe. Listen and watch for personality cues; be open to someone else's style, values and perspective.
- Adapt. Find common ground with someone who is different; this could be your speed of speaking or the terms you use (e.g., talking about facts vs. feelings).
- Connect. Watch for body language and get feedback from others to see if you are being understood; check your own thoughts/feelings. Do you feel harmony or discord?

The objective is to understand and relate to all other personality types. That is when communication clicks and working together works best.
